UNPLUGGED

Unplugged is a school program for preventing the use of tobacco, alcohol and drugs aimed at teenagers between 12 and 14 years.

Experts from seven European countries elaborated it on the model of social influence. The studies conducted after this project show positive results, as there is a major slowdown and postponement of substances use in children who took part in the program.

This program is set to active learning, social influence and support the acquisition of effective life skills for everyday life in any context: for this reason it requires the training of teachers who offer classes, because they have to acquire themselves social methods and mental structures in order to propose it.
